EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The valuation process of the Kindaruma-Mwingi-Garissa Transmission Line is premised on the National and International Regulations that trigger resettlement whenever land is needed for public interest. Nationally, the major regulations related to this project include the following: The Constitution of Kenya (2010), The Land Act (2012), and The Way Leave Act and Eviction and Resettlement Bill (2012). Internationally, valuation is based on the principles provided in the World Bank Policy (OP 4.12) on Involuntary Resettlement.

The methods adopted for this valuation were both the comparables and Gross replacement cost methods aimed at estimating the replacement cost of the developments that would be affected by the project. Valuation of land was based on zonal values and comparables from a Mwingi-Tsaikuru road project that was undertaken this year (2012). A major challenge in the valuation process was that most of the land is unregistered and remains as trust land, though there are settlements. This made it difficult to establish the claims by the residents.

Valuation of trees was based on the list of values from the Ministry of Agricultural and Forestry. Most of the land was still in its natural state, and thus most of the trees were indigenous.

The project will acquire approximately 1,728 acres of which, 886 acres is registered and privately owned by individuals, groups or institutions, while 842 acres is not registered and is held as trust land. The value is approximately Kshs. 297,382,000 (read Kenya shillings, two hundred and ninety seven million, three hundred and eighty two thousand only) for the land. About 28,260 trees will be affected valued at approximately Ksh.43, 724,250 (read Kenya Shillings forty three million, seven hundred and twenty four thousands, two hundred and fifty. About 490 structures will be affected by the project valued at approximately Ksh.66, 574,407 (Read Kenya Shillings, sixty six million, five hundred and seventy four Thousand, four hundred and seven only). Approximately 30% of the total will be added for resettlement, monitoring and evaluation, and other miscellaneous needs that may arise, which is approximately Kshs. 122,304,197 (Read, Kenya Shillings one hundred and twenty two Million three hundred and four thousands, one hundred and ninety seven only)). Therefore the total project cost is approximately Ksh. 529,984,854 (Read Kenya Shillings five hundred and twenty nine million, nine hundred and eighty four thousands, eight hundred and fifty four only).

1 VALUATION

1.1 Introduction

In property valuations there are 5 generally accepted methods or approaches to value. These are the Sales Comparison, the Income Capitalization, the Gross Replacement Cost Method (GRC), the Residual, and the Profits method:

The first method comparative approach to value that considers the sales of similar or substitute properties and related market data and establishes a value estimate by processes involving comparison. Property prices need to be analyzed and interpreted in order to obtain the true values utilized in the comparison analysis. This method is the preferred approach in an active market where a trend of prices can be established.

The second method is a comparative approach that considers income and expense data relating to the property being valued and estimate value through a capitalization process. This method is applied when income generating capabilities are present and are considered by the market as forming the primary basis for value. The capital value arrived at is the value attributed to the right to an annual income stream. This approach, to name a few, entails a research and analysis of transaction prices of similar or comparably substituting properties, rental rates, expense ratios, yields, capitalization rates, tenant covenants, and risk. In essence this approach entails an income stream from which expenses are deducted, the net income is then capitalized (income is converted to capital) by dividing it with a capitalization factor. Although the value is determined by capitalization, the basis of information researched and analyzed by utilizing the comparison approach. This method, therefore, is a combination of income and expense data though valued by processes of comparison.

The third method, known as the Gross replacement Cost method(GRC) evaluates the current cost of replacing an asset with its modern equivalent asset less deductions for physical deterioration and all the relevant forms of optimization such as the expected optimum land productivity. This is appropriate when little or no market evidence is available and the property does not transact readily in the market. The approach entails the measuring of the improvements (buildings, site works) to which the appropriate construction costs are applied, resulting in the new replacement (or reproduction) cost. A depreciation factor (being composed of three factors namely physical deterioration, functional obsolescence, and external or economical obsolescence) is applied to the replacement values per category or segment in order to arrive at the present day value for the improvements. The market value of the land as if unimproved is then to be determined and added to this depreciated amount with the total amount reflecting the market value for the property.

The fourth method, known as the residual method, is the estimated amount that an entity can obtain from the disposal of an asset after deducting the estimated costs of disposal, if the asset were already of the age and in condition expected at the end of its useful life. This approach is applicable where a valuation is to be conducted for undeveloped land or where redevelopment of an obsolescent piece of land demands it. The first step is to estimate the value of the development as complete, whether it's a township development or residential development or any other use or type of building. Then an allowance for development costs, professional fees, advertising and marketing costs, financing costs, developer's profit and risk is deducted from the value as complete which results in the residual value.

The fifth method is the profit's method and is sometimes referred to as the accounting method. The method entails an estimation of the gross annual income or turnover from which cost of sales and operating expenses are deducted. The net balance is then divided into a rent and profit split. The rental split is capitalized at an appropriate capitalization factor. In addition, the goodwill is to be ascertained at a market related multiplier with the market represented by the total of these two amounts. The second approach takes the estimated net profit only, divides it into a rental and profit split, and capitalizes the rental amount in order to determine the value of the business "lock, stock and barrel".

1.2 Analysis of the Valuation Methodology Adopted for this Project

1.2.1 Structures

The method adopted is the Gross Replacement Value Method and comparable method that evaluates the current cost of replacing an asset. This is appropriate because there is little or no market evidence available. The approach entails the measuring of the improvements (buildings, site works) to which the appropriate construction costs are applied, resulting in the new replacement (or reproduction) cost. An addition of 15% is added to the value as statutory allowance to cater for disturbance.

1.2.2 Trees and Crops

Trees and crops are counted and valued based on the values given from the Ministry of agriculture (see attached annex from the Ministry). During the field work, the trees were recorded according to the size (Young, Medium, or Mature) interpretation of the values of the trees and crops values was sought from the agricultural officer. Comparables from the Ministry of land were also checked on compulsory acquisition cases, and a list was prepared as attached in Annex. This was a dry season and no crops were found in the farms.

1.2.3 Land Values

Land values were calculated based on zonal values and comparable values (Mwingi-Tseikuru Road 2012 Project) from the Ministry of Lands. A large portion of the land (approximately 910 acres) is not registered and falls under trust land. This area was valued based on the zonal values and government comparables. A major challenge was on establishing the individual land ownership where the land was not registered, while some of the land is settled and developed and adjudication is ongoing (such as Nguni), other land is undeveloped but there are individuals claiming for ownership (especially Ukasi to Garrissa). Establishing individual land interests on this area was not possible and the land was valued as a whole under trust land. The second challenge was establishing the whole land, while the team was able to establish the affected land using GPS, due to the alignment of the transmission line, some land did not have searches from the Ministry of lands and that made it difficult to get the size of the whole land. This can be established by carrying out the land searches.

1.3 Primary Data Collection

The data collected during field survey was as follows,

- i. Land size was established by the surveyor noting the size of the whole land and also the land affected (The challenge was in cases where the land is not adjudicated. The land is held informally by individuals but registered under the local authority. Under such cases, the affected land and whole land per individual could not established)

- ii. Affected structures were measured and the structures characteristic noted. They include, the materials used in the construction of walls, roof, floor and the status of the structure. For purposes of depreciation factor, the date that the structures were built were also noted.
- iii. Trees were counted, noting the types of the trees, and the size
- iv. On crops, this was a dry season, and none were found in the farm. There was also the assumption that since power line does not prohibit farming, any farming done before the project commences needed not be compensated.

1.4 Basis for Valuation

The valuation process is premised on the national and international regulations that trigger resettlement whenever land is needed for public interest. Nationally the major regulations include Constitution of Kenya (2010), Land Act (2012), and Way leave Act and Eviction and resettlement bill (2012). Internationally, valuation is based on the principles provided in the World Bank Policies (OP 4.12) on Involuntary Resettlement.

1.5 Cost Summary

The compensation cost caters for structures and 15% disturbance allowance, land and trees valuations. Valuations for crops were not done explained earlier because at the time of the census and socio-economic survey, the season was dry and there were no crops in the fields. The Consultant has also assumed that since this is a transmission line project, crops will not be affected and the PAPs can continue to grow and harvest their crops. The total compensation cost is approximately Kshs.530 Million as indicated in the Table below and the breakdown of the cost estimates is provided in Appendices 1-3.
